Platinum and the bigger economic picture in South Africa

Communication is key to stakeholder engagement

Building a new mine is good news for the community's future

Welcome

The past few months have witnessed a good deal of turmoil in South Africa's platinum mining sector. However, from Wesizwe Platinum's perspective, the focus has firmly remained on work to successfully develop our flagship project, the Bakubung Platinum Mine, in line with the recently announced new optimisation plan. At the same time, taking cognisance of the importance of building and maintaining proactive community relationships in the local areas situated close to the mine site, we have continued our efforts over the last month to meet and communicate with local stakeholders, engaging them on all the latest developments. Such an approach ensures that both Wesizwe and the Bakubung Platinum Mine remain positively entrenched in the hearts and minds of all those who live and work in the local community and who have a vested interest in the success of the project.

In this edition of Investor News, we share insights on the South African platinum mining sector as a whole and Wesizwe's role within it, from some of our most senior executives in the organisation. Such insights are integral to our company's approach to stakeholder engagement and communication, ensuring that we continually improve the level of engagement we have with all our valued stakeholders, both internal and external.

We hope you enjoy reading this latest edition of Investor News and look forward to bringing you interesting news and project information each month.

Platinum and the Bigger Economic Picture

When looking at the bigger economic picture, there is little doubt that the platinum market has attracted more than its fair share of controversy and challenges in recent times.

The supply of platinum has been slowed by labour turbulence in South Africa since 2012, leading to a current global shortage of the metal. Fortunately, demand has also been muted but an optimistic view is that it will grow again as the US and European economies recover.

*Ms Dawn Mokhobo,
Chairperson, Wesizwe
Platinum Limited*

As with other precious metals, platinum demand and pricing go through commodity cycles. Platinum is perhaps best known to most people as a precious metal component of fine jewellery, however platinum is also used in many manufacturing applications and in motor vehicle production. Platinum prices and demand were high in the boom prior to 2008, but fell sharply as consumer demand for motor vehicles and other platinum-bearing products diminished. But, as vehicle emissions standards are tightened, the demand from the motor vehicle industry may increase. In 2014, after years in development, the world's first commercially available fuel cell powered vehicles will be launched to the public. If well received, this motor vehicle sector may open up a new source of platinum demand. Nevertheless, demand by the main motor vehicle producers remains constant and is generally predicted to grow in step with the global economy.

Irrespective of present demand, platinum mines are developed in response to 10, 20 and 30-year views of future demand. Current projections show that available supply will begin falling well below anticipated demand from the time when Wesizwe Platinum's flagship Bakubung Platinum Mine begins producing metals in 2018. This bodes well for the project going forward.

Bringing a new mine into operation is good for the future of the local community and the people who live and work there

As Wesizwe works hard to bring its flagship project, the Bakubung Platinum Mine, into operation, it opens up opportunities for thousands of local residents in the community to enter into the mining industry and gain specialized and portable skills. Wesizwe has initiated a range of programmes, including learnerships, which help to develop skills in a wide variety of trades. All of these programmes are embedded in the Wesizwe Social and Labour Plan, an investment in infrastructure development, portable skills programmes and internships that will provide the future skills needed to support the mining industry going forward. A number of bursaries have also been created to develop future mining talent. With new employment opportunities becoming available in conjunction with our other community development initiatives, the local communities surrounding the mine stand to benefit in a number of ways.

Another major component of Wesizwe's investment in the Bakubung Platinum Mine and its surrounding communities, is the company's undertaking to provide housing for at least 70% of the miners that we employ. This will be a major investment in the development of the local community in a sustainable way that strengthens the social cohesiveness of the region. We have identified a suitable tract of land, with the help of the local authorities, and are presently undertaking the necessary feasibility studies to get this project underway.

Together with our other community enhancement projects in education and water provisioning, we are building a mine that is at the heart of the local community, providing employment and skills development opportunities in a part of the country that has seen its fair share of challenges over the years. In future, and for the lifetime of the mine, the Bakubung Platinum Mine will be a cornerstone of the local community.

Wesizwe launches its on-screen news platform to update stakeholders

Wesizwe Platinum understands the power of utilising the full range of communication platforms at its disposal in order to improve the way in which it engages with each of its valued stakeholders. Over the past eighteen months, the stakeholder engagement strategy has been in its implementation phase, seeing the introduction of a number of new communication channels introduced to appeal to the individual needs and readership/viewing habits of each key stakeholder group. As part of this strategy, the next phase of communication platforms is being introduced with the launch of the weekly Wesizwe TV news platforms utilising the digital screen displays at the company's head office in Rivonia. Each week, new content is produced in an easy-to-view format specifically designed to meet the needs of employees working at the company's offices, and also visitors who pass through the reception area and the waiting rooms. Viewers can keep updated with the latest project news and photographs, event reports, project milestones, new staff appointments, and much more. Similar platforms are to be introduced at Wesizwe's regional offices in the near future. ■
